This project won planning approval at appeal. Holder Mathias had worked in close liaison with the planning officers during the design development phase. Members, however, had decided that they were opposed to the scheme on the grounds – ‘we don’t do modern’ was allegedly said by one member.

At appeal, the planning inspector overturned the decision and awarded planning consent and costs were paid by the Council.

The design of the apartment buildings will add to the eclectic mix of styles and ages of building already found in this urban area of Cardiff.
